

Stairway and atrium on the via Santo Spirito Side

Members of the family and their guests used this big stairway in red marble to enter the mansion from via Santo Spirito.

Look at the big painting on the wall. It has lots of paintings close to each other in one single frame. Sometimes, like here, the paintings are in rows one over the other.

This kind of composition is called a “polyptych” (which means “many paintings”). In this polyptych, there are also two big statues of painted wood.

Go down the stairs, where there is a big fireplace.
You'll also find a beautiful stained glass window.
If you look carefully at the window, you will see that the image of Saint Stephen is made up of lots of little pieces of colored glass, like in a collage.
